LETTER FROM THE VICE PRESIDENT

Hearts. Minds. Systems. That’s what we get to work on in the Office for Equity and Inclusion. Through individual and community engagement, we reach hearts. Through inclusive education and programming, we nourish minds. Through institutional change and collaborations across the college, we realign systems. All of this is in the service of improving and enriching the educational and work experience of everyone at Smith -- students, staff, and faculty -- especially for those who have been historically excluded.

Smith College, along with the rest of the world, faced a reckoning last year. Before the killings of George Floyd, Breonna Taylor, Ahmaud Arbery, and so many others, we were working on a strategic plan to advance equity and inclusion. In July, we posted a draft plan for comment, and hundreds of students, staff, faculty, and alums gave us feedback. At Cromwell Day in November 2020, we announced our preliminary list of action items. As of this moment, 21 of 42 items are completed with many others in process.

The work of racial justice as it intersects with other demands for equity and inclusion is never done. My team and I remain open to your ideas and feedback, and we look forward to making more progress in 2021-22.

Yours,
Floyd Cheung
INTRODUCTION

This report is a brief look into the achievements, goals, and collaborations of the Office for Equity and Inclusion.

The Office for Equity and Inclusion (OEI) grounds its work in the college’s mission and sustained commitment to be a diverse, equitable and inclusive campus. We aspire for every member of our community to uphold these principles. To promote a shared understanding across campus, here is our articulation of the principles of diversity, equity and inclusion.

A commitment to DIVERSITY requires us to develop an awareness of who makes up our community and what their experiences and identities are.

A commitment to INCLUSION requires us to make sure all community members are seen, heard, respected, and valued as full human beings and are encouraged to contribute to community life.

A commitment to EQUITY requires us to remove obstacles to full participation and recognition for members of our community and to pursue corrective justice for those unfairly denied full participation and recognition.

Primary initiatives coordinated through the office provide education and support to individuals and departments as well as encourage self-reflection in ourselves and others.
STAFF

Floyd Cheung | he/him
Vice President for Equity and Inclusion
Floyd Cheung guides the development and administration of all equity- and inclusion-related initiatives and programs at Smith. Among his responsibilities are programming, curricular initiatives, and supporting the recruitment and retention of a diverse faculty, staff and student body.

Queen Lanier | she/her
Assistant to the Vice President for Equity and Inclusion
Queen Lanier is the initial point of contact for the office. She works closely with the vice president to prioritize the workflow of the office, maintain the office budget, and schedule committee and individual meetings for office members. Queen manages all aspects of the office's day-to-day operations while also serving on the Cromwell Day Committee, Inclusion in Action and the Virtual Community Engagement Team.

Toby Davis | he/him
Inclusion Education Trainer/Facilitator
Toby Davis ’03 is available to provide a variety of trainings to individual departments, groups and the campus as a whole. In addition, Toby serves as the point person and advocate for low income, first generation, trans and gender-nonconforming students. His areas of interest include antiracism, queer and trans liberation, intergroup dialogue and compassionate communication. He holds a B.A. from Smith College and an M.Ed in Social Justice Education from the University of Massachusetts, as well as a certificate in Social Justice Mediation.

Raven Fowlkes-Witten | they/them
Program and Outreach Coordinator
Raven Fowlkes-Witten serves as the point person and advocate for undocumented, trans and gender non-conforming students. They organize and provide resources for these groups as well as advise and support students as needed. Raven oversees the office social media and is excited by campus programs centered around equity and inclusion.
STAFF

Loretta Ross | she/her
Faculty Fellow for Equity and Inclusion and Associate Professor of the Study of Women and Gender
Loretta Ross helped to launch the reproductive justice movement, is now teaching people to call in instead of call out, and serves as the director of IDP102: Thinking Through Race.

Amy Hunter | she/her
Director of Equal Opportunity and Compliance/Title IX Coordinator
Amy Hunter is responsible for coordinating Smith’s compliance under federal and state civil rights laws and regulations related to education, employment and public accommodations. She manages the college’s response to reports and complaints of discrimination, including mediations, investigations, findings and recommendations, and provides campus-wide training and outreach aimed at compliance and prevention for employees and students.

Diamond Mark
OEl Intern, 2020
Diamond Mark, an English major, created a glossary of terms related to identity, equity, and social justice for new members of the Smith community.

Sonia Paredes
OEl Intern, 2021
Sonia Parades, an Economics major, is working on the accessibility map of the campus and helping with social media and communications.

SELECTED FEEDBACK

• “Although my comments are a tad belated, I nonetheless want to say, thank you for a terrific virtual Cromwell Day 2020. Particularly, in this difficult year, it was wonderful in being able to come together as a community and reflect on such interesting topics. I actually felt a bit sad to see the post that read: Cromwell Day has ended.” - alum class of ‘78

• “I appreciated her remarks and was especially happy to be able to attend. My position at Smith often does not allow me to leave the office to attend Cromwell events. I hope Zoom or some sort of remote option will remain in the future!” - staff member

• “... only approval and awe at the very real and tangible improvements you and the OEI team have made to Smith in the last year or so” - current student

• “I’m so glad I participated and very proud to be a part of the project” - staff member on staff profiles project

• “Hearing students at the roundtable discussion was particularly helpful. Hearing their perspectives on what they are doing and what they need from us as faculty members gave tangible things that I can do that will directly benefit our Black students.” - faculty member

• “Professors, all of them that have taught [in one STEM department], they really try to master names and pronouns. Literally, they have Google forms, you can fill out your name, your pronoun, why you are interested in this class, classes you have taken... I wish most departments were like the [that] department.” - current student on trans inclusive progress in the classroom
Priority action items for next year:

- Advance proposal for a required course on race
- Launch departmental action planning
- Support BIPOC wellness

- Hire for the position of Action Planning Facilitator/Coordinator
- Grow RCSG programming and support
- Continue progressing trans and non-binary inclusion through the Trans/Non-binary Working Group and Affirming Identity in Technology (AITT)
- Support the Common Goods Resource Center in addition to other “basic needs” efforts for low-income students
- Collaborate with Professor Loretta Ross and the Dean of the College’s Office to integrate “Calling In” into new student orientation
- Unite affinity groups through book groups, reading The Sum of Us by Heather C. McGhee
- Launch Antiracist Learning Community with the Provost’s Office for faculty and staff who teach
- Begin collaboration with Provost and Dean of the College on inventorying AAC&U high-impact practices, gathering student participation data disaggregated by race, and recommend innovations to improve equity
