DESCRIPTION

This course asks the big question, “What is the Meaning of Life?” and explores a range of answers offered by philosophers and religious thinkers from a host of different traditions in different eras of human history. We will explore a variety of forms of philosophical and religious thinking and the ways that they can be directly relevant to our lives. We will take these texts and ideas seriously; we will approach them critically; and we will learn from them.

REQUIREMENTS

1. Read attentively. Finish the assignments for each class before class time and think hard about them.
2. Attend class regularly. Being present is an important part of your class participation grade, and more than two unexcused absences will put that grade in jeopardy.
3. Listen actively and speak thoughtfully. Although class is large, this is not simply a lecture course. We plan to discuss the materials with you, so be prepared to talk about them. Keep in mind Wittgenstein’s aphorism, “Even to have expressed a false thought boldly and clearly is already to have gained a great deal.”
4. Make regular postings on Moodle, responding to the readings, class discussion, and/or the postings of other students. Our hope is that conversations that begin in class can continue online and vice versa. We expect you to post 150+ words each week, though you can skip two weeks during the semester. Creativity is encouraged, rambling is not. Although you are welcome to focus on a particular passage within a week’s assignment, you should try to contextualize that material within the rest of the week’s readings. Postings for each week should be submitted by Saturday at midnight of that week, and all postings made during a particular week should be posted in the folder for that week.

5. Write three short papers on assigned topics. These should be 5 pages in length, double-spaced, with 1-inch margins, and in a 12-point font. These will be submitted on the following dates: February 22, April 5, and May 7.

In summary, you will be evaluated by your papers, each of which will count for 30% of your final grade, and your participation in class and on Moodle, which will count for the remaining 10% of your final grade.
