COURSE DESCRIPTION

There is a tendency to view the marketplace and religion as discrete spheres of activity, with economic practices occurring in the one and spiritual practices in the other. But there are important ways in which religion functions as a marketplace, with merit and salvation to be earned or lost, and churches and temples selling their wares. Similarly, the marketplace often functions as a religion, with its own creeds, rites, sacred texts, priests, and unquestioned truths.

In this interdisciplinary seminar we will focus on this latter proposition using the concepts and methods of sociology and religious studies. We will draw upon the same analytical methods that are used to understand the internal logic, ritual practices, and institutional standing of any religion. We think this approach can provide enormous insight into the workings of the economy and society, including the practice and mythology of markets and their reach, the logic of gift exchange and the interests behind apparent disinterestedness, the power of the metaphor of an “invisible hand” to the faithful, as well as the status of economics as a master discipline and science. While there will be a particular emphasis on the United States, frequent comparisons will be made to other societies. Seminar readings have been selected from a combination of classical work in sociology, economics, and religious studies, and more recent work in economic sociology, economic anthropology, and cultural studies.

REQUIREMENTS

1. You are expected to attend class regularly, finish the assigned readings on time, and participate in class discussions actively and, we hope, enthusiastically.
2. Each week, after class, you will be expected to post 250+ words on Moodle, reflecting on your insights from the readings, class discussion, and the postings of other students. Although you are welcome to focus on a particular article or passage within a week's assignment, you should try to contextualize that material within the rest of the week's readings. Postings made during a particular week should be posted in the folder for that week, and all postings for a particular week should be submitted by Wednesday at midnight of that week.
4. Two students will be assigned to introduce each reading. They will offer a brief overview of the reading, highlight the key points, and along with the instructors facilitate the ensuing discussion.
5. You will also be required to write a 15–20 page research paper in which you explore an idea or problem related to the course. (i) Topics are to be chosen in consultation with the instructors, and must be presented to them for approval, either by email or in person, by November 16th. (ii) You will post a 1–2 page abstract of your paper along with a preliminary bibliography by November 23rd. To ease your workload, no Moodle post is due that week. (iii) You will present your research as a work in progress during the last three weeks of the semester. (iv) You will submit final versions of your papers by December 21st at 5 pm. Hard copies are to be deposited in each of our mailboxes in Pierce Hall.
